

new Act of the leasehold half of his holding.

Thus it will be seen that instead of a positive term being put to every runholder's lease ninety days after the Act comes into force, no pastoral holding will be brought under the provisions of the Act in such a way as to interfere with the lessee's rights of occupation until the completion of a course of negotiations which ends when the notification of the division of the holding is published by the Minister in the Gazette. How long a time that process may occupy it is impossible to say. No fixed limit is or could well be assigned to it. In some cases a considerable amount of actual survey by the Government may be necessary before the adverse alienations can be marked on the tracing. It is possible, therefore, that should the Act pass the terms of some leases may run out before the holdings are brought under the provisions of the Act, and the Minister can be in a position to deal with them upon the new system. A further point to be noted is that the bill expressly provides, in sub-section v. of section 70, that "every runholder shall be entitled to compensation for improvements on land surrendered by him under the preceding subsections, to be determined by the land court after appraisement by the local board."

The bill, however, is to be judged rather upon the probabilities than upon the possibilities of the case. And whilst our correspondent's description of it is curiously inaccurate, that inaccuracy should not be allowed to divert attention from the false and indefensible principle now embodied in the measure. The bill mentions no fixed time when the existing leases shall be made to terminate or be subject to cancellation before their respective terms expire. But it does set up a system under which in many cases—probably in the great majority—the Minister would deal in a new way with holdings protected by express contract with the Crown against any such treatment. How can the State go back upon its engagements with the pastoral lessees and at the same time insist upon the fulfilment of obligations by public contractors? It will be said that the State will offer the lessee a new lease under a new tenure that will be worth more to him than the old one. That, however, is not the accepted method of doing either private or public business. The leases may not be of the same opinion as the State upon the question of loss or gain; and no contract should be terminated or varied without the consent of both parties to it. The lessee's compliance with the preliminary requirements of the Act would not be equivalent to a consent; for the law is intended to make compliance compulsory; besides which, if the lessee should fail, at a certain stage, to co-operate, the Minister is empowered to proceed without him.

It appears to us, the retention of this principle in the bill would wreck it, or at least, on grounds of public good, ought to wreck it. The Government should carefully consider all that is involved in a proposal to tamper with the conditions of a public engagement, and be prepared to say, when the motion for the second reading comes on, whether it will or will not undertake to expose this blot in committee. This is not an open question, like the twopenny rent or the six months for fencing. It is one of the principles of the measure; and the Government should make known its resolution either to abandon it or to adhere to it before asking the House to decide upon it at the second reading. But whilst the retention of this principle would certainly imperil the bill, the measure is too valuable as a whole, and has too many good features, to suffer materially through its exclusion. In the long run nothing is lost by keeping closely to sound rules of public policy. It is a sound rule that the State should never break its engagements. There would be no breach of engagements in carrying out the preliminary work for the division of the holdings whilst the leases are current; but any interference with the occupation rights of the lessees ought to be postponed (except by consent) until the leases, or extensions of term arising out of them, expire. The leases have not all been issued at one time, nor will they all expire at one time. It ought now to be understood that there is no real need to throw all the country or large areas in all parts of the country open to selection simultaneously. It would be an easy matter for the Government to ascertain how many of the current leases will run out year by year during the next five years, and whether by bringing holdings under the operation of the law as soon as possible the leases expire there would not be enough land thrown open to satisfy the demands of genuine settlement.

The attitude of the Government the other night, when Mr. R. B. SMITH moved the second reading of his Electoral Act Amendment Bill, was of doubtful interpretation. Mr. SMITH wants to get rid of the self-acting expansive principle lately embodied in our electoral system. The district he represents, and the neighbouring district, having obtained a large share in the representation, the object he had before contended for so persistently has been gained. He is a satisfied, nay, a happy man, and he seems to think that under the circumstances other electorates and their members should also be satisfied. He was prepared, however, to withdraw his bill, because he understood that the Government was pledged to introduce a bill embodying the principle of his own measure. Mr. STEWART interposed to say that this was going a little too far. He had only given a pledge to bring in an Amending Electoral Bill which would afford the House an opportunity for discussing this question; but whether the question would be raised by any provision of the bill itself, or whether it would be left to be raised by anybody who should propose a new clause for the purpose, he failed to say. He failed therefore to indicate whether a change of the nature of that proposed by Mr. SMITH would be approved or opposed by the Government.

The self-adjusting principle, as first introduced by Sir HENRY PARKER, was sound in theory, whatever inconvenience might in practice attach to it. But, as embodied in the bill, it is open to the charge of being inconsistently and imperfectly applied. It leaves up the representation of growing electorates that would otherwise have less than their proportionate share of influence; but it does not level down decaying electorates that have acquired at one time the right to return a certain number of members, have afterwards ceased to possess the number of electors which, according to the general principle of the law, is required to qualify them for so large a representation. Provision for this was made when the scheme was first propounded, but it was afterwards abandoned with the view of disarming opposition. The abandonment of it, however, not only destroyed the symmetry and equitable character of the scheme but cut away the ground from under one of the chief reasons why it was introduced. The great recommendation of the self-adjusting expansion system was that it would obviate the difficulties always attendant upon the redistribution of the representation by a special measure. It is easy enough in a special measure to make good deficiencies by creating new seats; the trouble lies in disfranchising electorates, or causing them to be merged into others, or in depriving them of the number of members returned by them in excess of their just claims. A self-adjusting system would have relieved Ministers and Parliament alike from an onerous task. But in abandoning the levelling down provision, the Government may be necessary before the adverse alienations can be marked on the tracing. The French local cohort of ruffianhood; but at least this inauspicious addition to the colonial population will not be made immediately. Mr. Commissioner KERR sentenced him to two years' imprisonment, and hard labour. The jury gave him, but taking the balance of chances, we would rather a gentleman of his peculiar gifts should remain an ornament to his native land.

The demons of dynamite have lighted upon another method of spreading alarm. Underground railways are always sufficiently dismal, if not dangerous, and they offer ready means for damage and property and destruction of life. Both these results were anticipated by the dynamiters; that was evident from the fact that these explosions were planned to take place at a time when the trains were filled with people, and at points where great havoc could be made. The diabolical purpose of those who do these things are specially notable when innocent persons are placed in danger. What portion of the community could possibly be injured by the class of visitors to be found at a "fisheries exhibition"? The lives of most of them must be far removed from the strife of politics. If they were specially aimed at, it must have been for the sake of showing that the most inoffensive portions of the community cannot hope to escape the malignity of men who think that they have a wrong for which they must seek revenge, not a remedy. The powers of dynamite have added nothing to the cruel desires of these men, but they have supplied a more deadly weapon. It is an accident of scientific discovery that its new resources, which are meant for good service, can be thus employed. Savages buy firearms, and discontents infants die, and there were three births during the voyage. No infections or contagious disease occurred, and the general health of the community is reported to have been excellent. The ship entered the Heads at about 6.30 a.m., and after being granted pratique by the port health officer, was towed to an anchorage in Neutral Bay, where she was visited by Mr. G. F. Wise, the immigration agent. The single girls were landed during the forenoon, and taken to the immigration depot, Hyde Park. Those of the single men and married couples who desire to go ashore to-day will be allowed to do so after the vessel has been visited by the Immigration Board. Dr. Kendall acted as surgeon superintendent, and Miss Bates as matron.

PARLIAMENT OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

PARLIAMENT OF VICTORIA.

[By TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MELBOURNE, THURSDAY.

In the Council, the Public Health Bill was further amended and returned to the Assembly. The Local Government Bill, with the amendments made by the Assembly, was considered, and some of the amendments were disagreed with. The bill was passed, and returned to the Assembly. The Officials in Parliament Bill, the Appropriation Bill, and the Tramways Branch Bill were passed each through its remaining stages. The Trades Union Bill was shelved. On the motion of Dr. Hearne, the Marriages and Matrimonial Bill was further considered in committee. Dr. Hearne having withdrawn the clause allowing a wife to obtain divorce for her husband's adultery with his sister, and for other causes the bill passed. The Mining and Private Property Bill was shelved, the Hon. W. E. Stanbridge objecting to its proceeding further to-night.

In the Assembly, the Attorney-General moved the second reading of the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Remuneration Bill, which, he explained, was copied from English legislation, and would enable attorneys to agree with their clients as to the costs of legal work done. The bill having passed through all its stages, was sent to the Council. With respect to the Dog Bill, the Speaker ruled that this bill was out of order, because it imposed charges on people, and it had been initiated in the Council. His Excellency the Governor it was announced had given the Royal assent to the following bills:—The Public Service Bill, the Railways Management Bill, the Bills of Exchange Bill, the Railway Loan Application Bill, the Customs Laws Consolidation Bill, the Betting Act Amendment Bill, and the Expiring Laws Continuation Bill. The amendments made by the Council in the Local Government Bill, 3. That clause 20 should be amended to admit an agent to act for a conditional purchaser. 4. That in clause 33, the time should be extended to three years. 5. That clause 38 should be amended to make it, per acre annually for the year. 6. That clause 40 should be amended to give the right of pre-emption to the State. 7. That the Sixth clause be expunged; and 8. That the annual rental of all leased lands be fixed at a rate not to exceed 1d. per acre."
